

VEAL IS CHEAPER THAN BEFORE WAR —AT WHOLESALE

But Good Cuts May Be Had at Reasonable Prices Even in Retail Shops.

By P. Q. Fog.

(Special Food Report, Evening World.)
"Although unemployment is widespread, wages lower and purchasing power reduced, most consumers are still buying the more expensive meat cuts," according to Pendleton Dudley, Eastern Director, Institute of American Meat Packers, in his review of the meat and livestock situation during March. Decline in meat prices, the review says, was due largely to falling exports.

Exports of beef in 1920 are given at 161,000,000 compared with 314,000,000 pounds in 1919, and 728,000,000 in 1918. That 60 to 65 per cent. of the entire car load of the hog sold for less at wholesale during March than the average dressed cost, including manufacturing expenses, also is stated by Mr. Dudley.

Milk-fed veal is more abundant and cheaper at wholesale than even in pre-war days. Best country-dressed veal sold at 12c. to 16-17c. a pound wholesale in April, 1914, while yesterday good veal calves sold at 12c. to 13c. and only very choice brought 14c., compared with 26c. to 30c. a year ago to-day.

A prime veal calf weighing eighty pounds costs the retail dealer $11.25. The best brings $11.25, while forty pounds of hindquarters, if sold at 25c. a pound and 32 pounds of forequarters at 15c., bring the total to $16.92, a profit of more than 42 per cent.

Housewives should pass up the veal chops and the high priced cutlets and use the cheaper cuts, which can be prepared in a great number of ways.

Curry of veal is not only an economical but a tasty dish. The following recipe is used by a chef in a popular restaurant which has a wide reputation for this particular dish: Chop veal into pieces about one inch square, using the chuck or breast cut; season with salt and pepper and add chopped parsley, garlic or onions according to taste; when well browned add a spoonful of curry powder dissolved in broth; cook slowly and add boiled rice or green peas. Have your butcher prepare a veal "hocket," cut from the breast, and stuff in the same manner as a duck or goose, using stale bread soaked in milk; season with salt and pepper and add a few eggs. A little potchese mixed is said to make it more palatable.

Other meat may be substituted for veal. Retail stores are selling the cheap stewing and pot roast cuts at prices that bear no relation to the cost of the carcass. Chunks of mutton are tagged 8c. and 10c., and chunks of lamb weighing fully seven to eight pounds are tagged at 10c. to 12c. These chunks will weigh fully six pounds after the bones are removed, giving the housewife that amount of solid meat at 12c. to 16c. a pound, enough to make three meals for the average family.

Hallmark Detective Guilty of Murder.
Joseph W. Smith, a Pennsylvania Railroad detective, was found guilty of involuntary manslaughter by a jury in Jersey City early to-day for the killing of William J. Beck of New Durham, N. C., in the Pennsylvania yards on the night of Jan. 11. Terence McGovern was acquitted. The jury recommended mercy for Smith, who testified he fired after Beck discharged a revolver at him.
